UK Outlook for Sunday 20 Jun 2021 to Tuesday 29 Jun 2021:
Unsettled conditions are likely at the start of this period, with rain and stronger winds in the northwest on Sunday. Further south and east, it will generally be warm and humid, with a risk of thundery showers. Atlantic air is then likely to gradually spread in from the west across the country, bringing a change to cooler and more changeable conditions through the first half of next week. These conditions are likely to continue, bringing occasional spells of rain or showers interspersed with periods of dry weather and sunny spells. The driest and brightest conditions are likely in the southeast, though further showers or thunderstorms are possible here. Temperatures are likely to recover to near normal by the end of the month.
